King John and Magna Carta

In 1199, Henry’s youngest son, John, became king of England. John soon made powerful enemies by losing most of the lands the English had controlled in France. He also taxed his barons heavily and ignored their traditional rights, arresting opponents at will. In addition, John quarreled with the Catholic Church and collected large amounts of money from its properties.

King John’s acceptance of Magna Carta has been illustrated and painted many times. He is often, as he is here, incorrectly shown signing his name with a pen. In fact, he stamped his royal seal on the document to show his agreement.
What did King John do that so infuriated (angered) the noble barons of England?

He taxed his barons heavily and ignored their traditional rights, arresting opponents at will.
In June 1215, angry nobles forced a meeting with King John in a meadow called Runnymede, beside the River Thames, outside of London. There, they insisted that John put his seal on a document called Magna Carta, which means “Great Charter” in Latin. Magna Carta was an agreement between the nobles and the monarch. The nobles agreed that the monarch could continue to rule. For his part, King John agreed to observe common law and the traditional rights of the nobles and the Church.

The Magna Carta’s Importance

• In many ways, Magna Carta only protected the rights and privileges of nobles.

• Limited the power of the king and ended the idea of rule by divine right.

• But as time passed, the English came to see it as the beginning of people’s rights and liberties that would lead to democracy. Democracy: rule by the people.
Habeas Corpus

- John also agreed that “no free man” could be jailed except by the lawful judgment of his peers or by the law of the land.
- This idea eventually developed into a key part of English common law known as habeas corpus.
- [habeas corpus: the legal concept that an accused person cannot be jailed indefinitely without being charged with a crime] the court must consent.
